DIRECTOR'S MESSAGE

Hi Team,

This month, instead of business updates or announcements, I want to talk about something simple—but powerful: the importance of acknowledging what we don't know, and being open to learning from one another.

In a world that moves fast and expects answers instantly, it takes confidence to say, "I'm not sure about this." But that's exactly where real learning begins. Every time we admit there's something we need to learn—whether it's a process, a platform, or a perspective—we open the door to growth.

Personally, I've learned a lot just by listening and asking questions—even from teammates younger or newer than me. And that's the beauty of working with a team like ours—knowledge doesn't flow top-down, it flows in every direction.

Let's continue creating an environment where we're not afraid to ask, share, or even admit when we're stuck.

Whether you're helping a colleague troubleshoot, picking up a new skill yourself, or just observing how someone else works—every little moment is a step forward. There is a proverb in Chinese which justifies the spirit of this message perfectly: "He who asks a question is a fool for a minute; he who does not ask is a fool for life."

I would like to share few quotes which I really like from great personalities in same context:

"Stay hungry, stay foolish."— Steve Jobs

"Learning never exhausts the mind."
— Leonardo da Vinci

Let's keep approaching our work with a beginner's mind—curious, humble, and always willing to grow.

LEO'S ROAR BY LEO

Hello! Leo here.

Reading about the horrific crash of an Air India passenger jet in Ahmedabad got me thinking about how I felt when I lost my Uncle Apollo.

I never thought I'd wake up one morning and not hear Uncle Apollo's deep chuckle echoing across the savannah. He was always there teaching me how to stalk silently, telling stories under the stars, and nudging me forward when I was unsure of myself. Now, the tall grass seems quieter, and the sky a little dimmer. It's strange how someone can be such a big part of your world, and then suddenly, they're just... gone. I still wait for his shadow to appear beside mine at sunset.

But the pride showed me something I didn't expect—loss doesn't mean being alone. My mother laid close to me at night, her warmth wrapping around my sadness. The older lions shared stories of Uncle Apollo's strength and humor, and I started to realize that remembering him keeps a part of him alive. I tried teaching my younger cousin the same paw-step Apollo taught me. He stumbled, we laughed, and for a moment, it felt like my uncle was laughing with us.

Grief isn't something you run from. You carry it, and little by little, it changes shape.

I know I'll miss Uncle Apollo for a long time, maybe forever. But I'm beginning to understand that part of growing stronger is learning how to keep going, even when your heart feels heavy. He would have wanted me to keep learning, keep playing, and keep leading with kindness. So, I will. And every time I feel the wind ruffle my mane or the earth rumble with distant thunder, I'll think maybe that's his way of reminding me he's still watching, proud of the lion I'm becoming.

So, to all my fellow cubs out there—lion or human—I know how painful it is to lose a family member or friend. But we must be brave, and soldier on. Life isn't always fair. It just is. It's up to us to pull together ... and remember those we've lost. In that way, they'll always be with us.

That's all for now. See you next month. In the meantime, remember Kunalsinh's guidance,

"Be Safe, Work Hard, Eat Well, Sleep Tight." I will!

Bye for now ... Leo

LIBERTY IN EVERY STEP – U.S. INDEPENDENCE DAY

The Fourth of July marks the United States' Independence Day, commemorating the adoption of the Declaration of Independence in 1776. It is a day that honors the founding principles of liberty, equality, and democracy, which continue to shape the nation's identity and global influence.

Beyond the celebrations, fireworks, and patriotic displays, July 4th is a time for reflection on the enduring values of freedom and the ongoing journey toward justice and unity. It reminds us of the power of collective vision, resilience, and the spirit of progress.

As we recognize this historic day, let it also inspire us, whether in life or work, to stand for integrity, innovation, and shared purpose.
